I. INTRODUCTION

Since 2009, when the Lisbon Treaty entered into force, the European Union Common Commercial Policy has deeply evolved with a stronger involvement of the European Parliament in its shaping and control. Trade policy became more comprehensive and inclusive needing a stricter collaboration with stakeholders, whose voices have to be heard and their challenges taken into account. This dimension is particularly relevant for the trade chapters of customs performance, functioning and management as well as the defence of Intellectual Property Rights (IPRs), Geographical Indications (GI) and the integrity of international supply chains where risks are consistent and are undermining the security and safety of EU residents, consumers and businesses.

Despite the steady increase of trade in services, trade in goods remains a core element of international trade relations. Raw materials and intermediate products move intensively around the world due to the development of global value chains. Final consumers enjoy a large variety of both agricultural and industrial products thanks to the expansion of Trade Agreements either multilateral, regional or bilateral. Therefore, physical customs remain essential to support the trading interests of the Union, the safeguarding of EU own resources, notably customs duties, and national tax interests. Consequently, European ports demand a common set of rules applied in a single way in order to enjoy a level playing field when competing for cargos and same administrative burden, currently arising from different VAT regimes, which are distorting trade both on and offline.

The enforcement of the Trade Facilitation Agreement should be a priority for both the EU and the WTO in order to facilitate the enhancement of the economy of underdeveloped areas<sup>12</sup> but it is not enough.

Customs are also responsible for tackling, through border enforcement, the increasing volume of trade in goods infringing IPRs that threaten jobs, growth, innovation and competitiveness. This is of key importance as IPR products and services represent around 90% of the exports of the EU, and generate 39% of the employment and 35% of the GDP. However, just 9% of SMEs use IPR enforcement intensively<sup>3</sup>. The reasons are that SMEs find the process too costly, too complex and/or of no avail. As a result, most of the advances made by SMEs do not benefit from any protection. This situation weakens not only their position within a given market, but also the EU economy as a whole as well.

The OECD has estimated that comprehensive trade facilitation reform could cut trade costs by up to 10% for OECD countries. On the global level, reducing trade costs by even 1% would increase worldwide income by [€] 30 billion. This represents a massive potential to tap into and explains why increasing the efficiency of customs is pivotal. Modernising customs and strengthening international customs cooperation are the main drivers. There is also considerable resource pressure on Member States customs administrations, which face major challenges in carrying out their tasks.

Because of their presence at the EU external border, customs are also called upon to implement more than 60 pieces of non-customs EU legislation related for example to dual use, fire arms, intellectual property, public health, consumer protection, the environment and agriculture.

II. The role of Customs: trade-related issues, WTO trade facilitation, tariff-cut, administration of provisions within multilateral and bilateral trade agreement

The European Commission and in particular DG Taxud has worked in the creation and application of a common Custom Code for the Union (UCC), published in 2013 and applied only since 1 May 2016. A smooth transition period to the new legal framework has been settled until the full application on 2021 under which European custom unions will operate.

The new code introduces specific simplifications of existing procedures that should potentially facilitate trade and reduce EU company costs, it should implement a common electronic custom system, simplify procedures for traders, improve cooperation with customs administrations including market surveillance authorities between them and with third countries and guarantee an easy recognition of the Authorised Economic Operators (AEO) worldwide. All these features, if functioning and harmonized, could facilitate and accelerate legitimate trade by promoting good EU practice and by implementing international customs and trade agreements and arrangements.

These objectives are targeting a faster and easier procedure for traders and more environmentally friendly custom system. The ways in which DG Taxud aims to reach these objectives are by drafting guidelines and by creating a framework for cooperation<sup>1</sup>. Thus, no compulsory measures seem to be put in place leaving manoeuvre of different interpretation among customs.

Regarding customs infringements and sanctions, The European Commission has proposed a Directive (COM (2013) 884) which is going to be inter-institutionally negotiated after its vote in plenary. The Directive as a basic text tries ensure a certain homogeneity in sanctions among Member States (MS): currently, 2/3 of MS provide for both criminal and non-criminal sanctions whereas one third only have criminal sanctions; the sanction threshold varies widely among MS, from 266 [€] to 50 000 [€]; economic operators are subject to different sets of responsibilities in each MS; the time limit to initiate a sanction procedure varies from 1 to 30 years and even in one case there is no time limit.

Apart from the differences in sanctions, both economic operators and infrastructure operators (ports) are indicating that the regulation in force has not at all a homogeneous application among MS, particularly regarding controls and risk management. Customs are obliged to apply a different range of controls including the nature and amount of duties applicable, public health requirements, environmental legislation, SPS regulation among others.

These differences in the treatment of infringements as well as the diverse enforcement of controls make Economic operators to choose the points of entrance to the internal market with looser controls and/or lower sanctions. Therefore, the EU and its MS are suffering from different distortions. First of all, the Balance of Payments of the MS do not reflect the actual flux in trade, since operators are cherry picking ports abroad a given MS for importing afterwards goods which were initially intended to fulfil the market of that MS.

Furthermore, a tax transfer is taking place between MS since these goods are paying tariffs and VAT in the physical port of entrance. In addition, EU roads must suffer from a more intense heavy traffic, affecting thus citizens in their day-to-day lives. Hence, given that the distortions are not negligible and have been in place for already decades further action has to be taken in order to create a real custom union.

The current system is organized on three different levels. Regulation is made at EU level, and is of course homogeneous. The execution of the regulation is made by MS. Hence, the first problems appear since the transpositions of directives is rather different among MS. Furthermore, some MS create additional regulation on different issues such as SPS. The third level is the actual control of goods, which is quite heterogeneous among the different custom points. Stakeholders are suffering from the discrepancies between regulations and execution at the second and third levels. Thus, they request further competences of the EU over the custom sector in order to guarantee that a common set of rules is equally applicable over the different custom points. Moreover, they also claim that a common EU control body should be put in place to guarantee that there are no differences of treatment along the points of entrance.

In addition, custom controls should also be set at mail entering points. The reason is that several firms based in third countries are using e-commerce to offer counterfeited goods that are sent by normal post within the EU territory.

Closely related to the improvement in the MS customs systems and the homogeneous application of regulation and controls is the improvement of the custom system of trade partners. Thanks to the Trade Facilitation Agreement<sup>1</sup> (TFA), which was negotiated at the World Trade Organization, the international community is going to devote outstanding resources to developing and least developed countries. The EU itself has committed 400 million euros apart from the technical assistance. However, it must be highlighted that all this effort has to clearly focus on two dimensions: facilitate legal trade and fight against illicit trade in its different ways.

In conclusion, functional and harmonised customs will help in the fight against counterfeiting of goods entering the single market, distorting EU economic growth and seriously exposing EU consumers. Only with the coordination of both sides of the custom procedure the EU can manage to obtain clear results.

II. Intellectual Property Rights and Geographical Indications

The EU economy is increasingly based on creativity and innovation. Thus, businesses must enjoy a set of conditions favouring innovation and protecting them from unfair competition, in particular from economic actors engaged in fraud. Furthermore, a share of the IPR infringements affects food and beverages, body care articles, medicines, toys and other products for daily use. Hence, they can be dangerous for health and safety of consumers. Consequently, the stronger the effort to curb IPR infringements and illegal trade the better for the EU citizens and firms.

Over time, IPR infringements detected at the border seem to remain stable. The domestic retail value amounts to over 600 million euros. The total number of cases steadily increased since 2008 going from 49.381 to 81.098 in 2015. However, the total number of articles has dramatically decreased, from around 178 million to 41 million in the same period<sup>1</sup>.

Regarding the areas affected, since 2011 there has been a clear shift in the products counterfeited detected at customs. Beverages, shoes, jewellery, and CDs have significantly decreased whereas food, cigarettes, body care items, fashion items, toys, medicines, vehicles accessories and office stationery rocketed. In terms of procedures, the three main categories are sport shoes, bags, wallets and purses and clothing. These goods are typical goods ordered online and shipped via post or courier.

About the countries of origin of counterfeited products the same ones remain at the top list over time, apart from some particular cases happened in 2015 (big shipments on tobacco from Montenegro and on food from Benin). Either accounting by number of articles or by value China, Hong Kong and Malaysia, United Arab Emirates, Turkey and India continue to ship the core of the illegal products. We must highlight that Malaysia only accounts for about two and a half million euros whereas China and Hong Kong are responsible for over 300 million and 100 million respectively.

In this context, the Council resolution on the EU Customs Action Plan to combat IPR infringements<sup>2</sup> together with the EU -China agreement<sup>34</sup> on Customs are a needed first step. However, some improvements may be achieved such as better ways to involve right-holders and to boost the participation of SMEs in the IPR system so they will become more protected; a deep feedback with Chinese authorities backed by MS embassies on the country; a follow up of relations with Hong Kong China given its small territory and large amount of infringements in value, among others.

In this regard, it is necessary to create, implement, or where appropriate, upgrade bilateral customs agreements to strengthen trade facilitation and improve security in all the supply chain, in cooperation with other international organization such as the WCO. This includes seeking ambitious commitments on rules, requirements, formalities and procedures related to import, export and transit at the level or beyond commitments taken in the context of the TFA as well as determination of rules of origin that offer legal certainty to traders and customs.

Closely related to IPR is the field of Geographical Indications (GI). Currently, Geographical Indications of agri-food products enjoy a rather acceptable level of defence within the EU. However, several aspects need to be improved.

First and foremost, GI must be better coordinated. Currently, they are not included in DG Trade nor at the EUIPO agency but at DG AGRI. Therefore, in current DCFTAs an enhance coordination on this issue (as well as IPRs) is needed to better defend EU interests.

Furthermore, a cluster of third countries is currently defending the inclusion of non-agri-food GI in the chapter of GI. Thus, in order to reach better trade agreements with these countries, the EC should continue works on the extension of GI to non-agri-food products. The EC made

HIGHLIGHT:

The shock victory of Donald Trump in the US presidential elections on November 9 is already having an impact on the RMB, with the currency weakening to new record lows. We gathered some of the key views from top bank analysts in the days since which draw a picture that is far from pretty (but not hopeless) for China.

BODY:

This week started with another surprise, with the People's Bank of China parity rate for the dollar against the onshore RMB (CNY) set at a new low 6.8291, weaker even than last week's close of 6.8120.

The CNY was followed, closing Monday down 0.52% to 6.8445, while the offshore RMB (CNH) retreated by 0.53% to 6.8523.

Meanwhile, a call between Chinese president Xi Jinping and president elect Trump took place on the same day, Chinese state media reported.

Xi told Trump that the two sides should strengthen co-ordination and promote bilateral economic development and global economic growth, expand exchanges and co-operation. Trump reportedly told Xi that he will look to strengthen US-China co-operation.

For now, market analysts can only make educated guesses about what lies ahead with a Trump presidency.

An early reaction on what to expect came from Singapore's UOB. Alvin Liew, a senior economist, noted that the market reaction to the Trump win offered clear parallels with the results of the Brexit vote in May, another upset of a very wide consensus view on the results of a popular vote.

"This is probably seen as the second Brexit moment of 2016 as Donald Trump "" the unlikely Republican Presidential nominee less than 12 months ago "" emerged as the new leader of the most powerful nation in the world, the 45th President of the United."

Looking ahead, should Trump keep its promises on trade (see box), things could take a turn for the worse in the US-China corridor, putting additional pressure on the RMB if China were to be labelled a currency manipulator by the US Treasury, according to Liew. FX pain

The question of what the future holds for the US-China trade relationship was also brought up by Morgan Stanley's Robin Xing and Jenny Zhang. On November 10, they wrote that a decline in export growth for China would lead to even faster

RMB depreciation, but that any policy moves from the US on this front were unlikely to be immediate given the likelihood of a judicial review and a possible World Trade Organisation trade dispute which could drag on.

Also on trade, UBS Wealth Management noted that reprisals from China and beyond could be expected.

"[With] Trump likely to pursue trade tariffs and protectionism, the risk of retaliation by other countries is set to increase," wrote Paul Donovan, global chief economist. "Retaliation would not have to be confined to reciprocal tariffs; retaliation could also include the threat of sovereign institutions selling their US assets and repatriating the proceeds. Whether or not this actually transpires, the threat of capital outflow as a weapon in a trade war could be very disruptive to financial markets."

Donovan felt that any punitive measures by Trump's administration could be matched by China diversifying its reserve assets away from the dollar, currently making up over 60% of the total.

UBS forecast the CNY to be at 6.8 by end-2106 and 7.2 by end-2017.

Mizuho put a more dramatic spin on it, noting that the CNH "collapsed" to 6.83 after Trump became the clear winner.

Ken Tai, Asian foreign exchange (FX) strategist at the Japanese lender, raised on November 10 the spectre of a double-whammy CNH crisis from stronger dollar and the threat, however unlikely, of an US-China trade war.

"Although market participants are sceptic to Trump's delivery in his policy plan, the main direction would be stronger US growth, higher reflationary pressure, faster Fed's rate hike pace and rise of global tensions," he said. "Against this backdrop, EM Asia currencies would come under heavy pressure on accelerating capital outflow back to the US market."

Tai concluded by noting that given China's high trade exposure to US, nearly 17% of total trade, and Trump's unfriendly policy plan, the CNH was set to stay under pressure for a period of time. Hold the tears

Yet some suggested calm (or at least not to despair just yet).

That's the view of Steven Sun, head of China and Hong Kong equity strategy at HSBC, who noted that China's A-shares market has not historically been highly correlated to global major market indices and also that the mechanics of the US Congress may be China's first line of defence in watering down extreme measures.

While markets will remain concerned with trade and currencies above all, that is not to say that Trump's 'America First' slogan will not have significant impact in other areas.

Take the Belt and Road Initiative launched by China, for example. Wei Yao, China economist at Société Générale, felt a geopolitical shift for the US would directly impact China's agenda.

"From a Chinese perspective, this may be seen as an opportunity to expand its influence in Asia via, for example, a bigger push of its 'One Belt, One Road' initiative," she wrote. "Domestically, an image of a stronger nation amid perceived external hardship might make the domestic economic slowdown less unpalatable to Chinese people."

Scott Kennedy, director at the Center for Strategic & International Studies in Washington, DC, felt greater tensions were inevitable but that it was too early to paint catastrophic outcomes.

"Deft diplomacy on both sides will be necessary to avoid the worst possible outcomes; in fact, it could help achieve a more balanced relationship that is more durable than currently appears to be the case," he wrote. "Prognosticators did not see Trump's election coming. Likewise, perhaps we should hesitate before concluding that a new era of U.S.-China unmitigated enmity and regional disorder is inevitable."

Beyond Trump: Special Election Report

Before we dive into the details, let's remember that there are three branches of U.S. government, and the presidency is just one of them. This excellent analysis looks at how voters changed the makeup of our legislative branch. It doesn't just tell you how many Republicans and how many Democrats are in each house of Congress, but also how those numbers affect key committees like Transportation & Infrastructure and Environment & Public Works.
